| 19 | Brief note about the event   | If you had five dollars and two hours, what would you do to make as much money as possible? This was the theme of 5$ challenge organized by LCTBIEL. This classroom exercise in creative thinking and entrepreneurship posed this quandary to student teams. The results were manifold and varied, often taking advantage of locally needed services, niche markets, and valuable time. These in-class experiments contain many valuable lessons on creative thinking in the start-up realm, including skills, ideas, and innovation as assets that always lend value. All they had to do was look around and see the opportunities in their midst. But; the team that made the most money completely challenged all the assumptions. They realized that the most valuable thing they had was not the $5 and was not the two hours. It was brilliant and again the lesson here is that so often we frame problems way too tightly and if we keep unpacking and unpacking them we realized that we have resources that are much larger and more valuable than we even imagined. But we also realized that our own skills that we have and the opportunities around us are bigger than we ever thought at the beginning. |        |
| 20 | Program Outcome? If any  | To help students understand nuances of carrying out small business venture which includes ideation, to execution.   |        |
